Gibraltar Speaks.

FELLOW CITIZENS.—Having been born south of that conspicuous line classed as Mason and Dixon's line, I have no desire to fight the Boys in Blue, nor to utter an unkind word against them. [Cheers.] Take the American soldier and there is no one can accuse them of cowardice. There may be individual cases, but they are rare. The present Indian depredations can be traced back to the im-becility and recklessness of past Administrations. The seeds of a whirlwind were permitted to be sown and we are now contending with the fruits of such sowing. Place matches in the hands of little children and then say there is no danger. Place firearms in the hands of unscrupulous and ignorant Apaches and then say that there will be a reign of peace.
It is proper that the people of the East and the Administration should know that these outrages are being committed close to the Mexican border, principally within the County of Cochise and near the New Mexican line covering a large stretch of country.
To a certain extent it is almost impracticable for the army to deal with this mode of warfare.

It would be better should the Government order the disarmament of every Apache, scouts and all, and a suitable reward offered to American detectives to entrap this roving band of marauders. If American detectives can outwit train robbers and the most unlawful element that ever cursed a community, (they the detectives) can upon suitable offers of reward, lay out a campaign, ensnare and entrap these marauders and annihilate the last one of them. It would be but a tithing of the present cost.

It is not expected that a literary man should dictate to the general of the army how he should conduct his campaign. It is supposed that the general of the past, who made Apaches jump in despair from mountain top to giddy depths below, is now dealing with the same crafty foe, and it is expected that he understands the manner of his warfare. But I here declare in the bright sun of an Arizona noonday, that it will take an army as thick as beams to bring this matter to a focus, and the State of Missouri could upon the same hypothesis have asked the services of the United States army to capture the James boxes. [Cheers]—Voice of Arizona.
